Industrial Parks in China's outbound engagement

Background: China's domestic industrial clusters developed from the early 1980s and are now major drivers of regional economic growth and a source of international competitiveness.

- Government support at all levels
- Part of China's own successful development experience

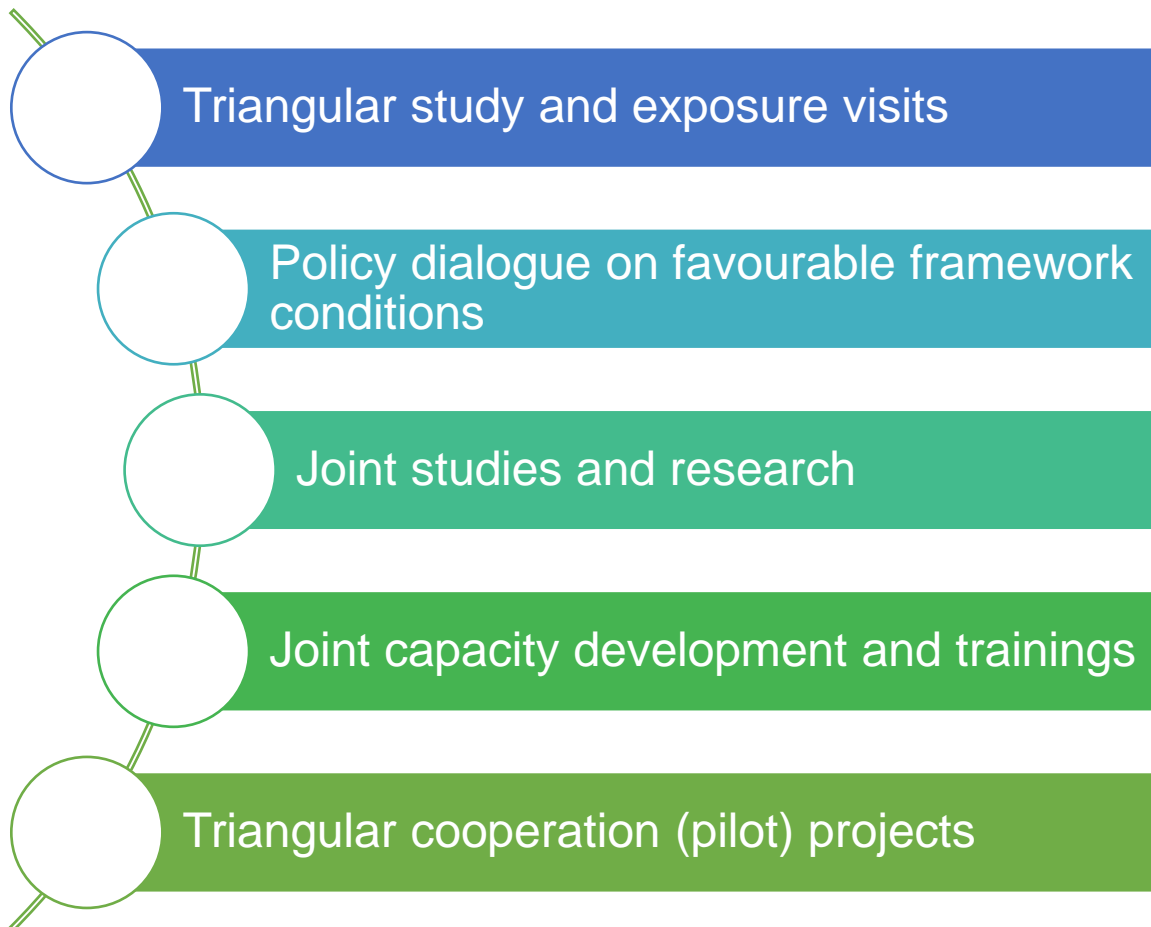

Construction of industrial zones and parks as significant part of the overseas strategy of China to:

- further promote international economic and trade cooperation
- enhance deeper economic integration with BRI countries
- encourage enterprises to go abroad

Research and advice for partner countries on framework conditions
